Dr. Wm. M. Clark, for the past three years the editor-in-chief and a large stock-holder in the Nashville Banner, has retired from its editorship and sold bis interest in the paper to Messrs, Ira P. Jones and H. M. Doak, formerly of the American. The newspaper fraternity will regret very much the retirement of Dr. Clark from the profession. During his brief, but brilliant career as editor of the Banner, he has won the friendship and esteem of all who have read and considered his honorable, manly ufterances, and know how deeply he has the welfare, honor and credit of Tennessee at heart. His journalistic ability is of high order and we hope the influence of his pen may still be felt in Tennessee journalism.

To his successors, Mr. Doak and Gen. Jones, who are known to all readers of Tennessee papers, the former as lately editor-in-chief of the American, the latter as managing editor of the same journal, we extend a warm welcome back into the fold and wish them all possible success in the new enterprise. With General Jones as manager and Mr. Doak as editor-in-chief, the Banner, which has already won a high name for itself and done valiant service for the cause of right and the front as the leading daily journat in the State.
